CYANIKA, Rwanda - It is almost impossible to move through the dirt yard surrounding the Notre Dame Church in this hilltop village, where more than 40,000 Hutu refugees are jammed into an

A tiny girl with a vacant stare sucks her mother's breast in vain. The girl is 18 months old, but she has the hands and feet of a 3-month-old. She has no strength to cry. "I have not eaten since yesterday," said her mother, Vestine Balestanters.

Only in the last few days have international relief agencies reached these refu-gees, at the end of a 100-kilometer stretch of road from Cyangugu that French paratroopers cleared of government militiamen.

Since a frenzy of killing began here in early April, tens of thousands of Rwan-dans, most of them members of the Tutsi ethnic group, have been killed. Several hundred thousand Rwandans have fled into Tanzania, where they have been aided by relief organizations. The agen-cies fear that still others forced from

Kohl Makes History - in His Own Way

By Craig R. Whitney
New York Times Service

BONN - How the generation of political leaders that runs Germany today views the country's history can now be seen, heard, and even touched in a museum that was opened here this month by Chancellor Helmut Kohl, who was 15 in 1945.

Just after becoming chancellor in 1982. when the Federal Republic of Germany consisted only of West Germany, Mr. Kohl suggested putting that view of histo-ry on display in a building across from his

But the display does not start when the Federal Republic did, in 1949. It begins in 1945, at the insistence of members of Parliament who voted $70 million in government funds for the museum. So it starts with what it calls "the ever-present past" - a stark reminder of the Holocaust in Dachan, Buchenwald, and Auschwitz, the devastation spread throughout Europe by the Germans, and the rubble that was Germany at the end of World War II.

"Many Germans do not want to deal with their own responsibility for the recent past, but the burden of the Nazi crimes remains with Germany in the present," visitors read as they enter a black marble box, a sort of mausoleum with graphic video displays of the reality of the concentration camps.

"Just seeing the names of the dead rolling down on the screen was a shock for " said Dano Himmelrath, a 15-year-old high school student from Niederkassel. "We knew that Germany lay in ruins after the war, but the newsreels made me realize just how had it really was then."

Inside the concrete-and-glass building is a winding uphill journey on ramps through nearly 50 years of German history, starting from a mockup bombed-out brick ruin.

The 7,000 objects on display range from the trivial - a display of antiquated washing machines and appliances from the 1950s - to the gigantic, a 23-meter (75foot), 62-ton private railroad passenger car that was originally built for Hermann Goering and later used by postwar chan-cellors from Konrad Adenauer to Willy

Along the ramps, visitors walk through the fuselage of an American C-47, one of the planes that airlifted supplies like coal and potatoes to West Berlin during the Soviet blockade of the western enclave in 1948-49, see an original red-and-white Coca-Cola dispensing machine, read political campaign posters from five decades, and touch an East German Trabant car used by people fleeing communism as their country was breaking up in 1989.

Koreas Agree On a Summit In the North Next Month

Historic 3-Day Session Will Be the First Since Nation Was Split in 1945

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

TOKYO - The presidents of North Korea and South Korea agreed Tuesday to a historic three-day summit meeting start-ing July 25 in Pyongyang, the North Kore-an capital, the first time the top leaders of the two Koreas will talk face-to-face since the peninsula was divided in 1945.

The agreement for the meeting between South Korea's first civilian president in more than three decades, Kim Young Sam, and North Korea's 82-year old dictator, Kim Il Sung, came in a remarkably nonacrimonious session at the border village of Panmunjom, along the Demilitarized Zone where the armistice was declared in the Korean War 41 years ago.

Only three months ago, at the same table, a North Korean official was threatening to turn Seoul, 50 kilometers (30 miles) to the south, into a "sea of fire" for bringing international pressure and the threat of sanctions against the North for its failure to open up its nuclear sites to international inspectors.

Not surprising, many in South Korea were deeply suspicious of whether the North's suddenly cooperative, friendly behavior was sincere, a result of the new openings former President Jimmy Carter appeared to have made during his trip to Pyongyang on June 18, or whether it is merely another ruse to gain time to build a fledgling nuclear arsenal.

The speed with which the two sides settled the details of the summit conference, with few of the angry exchanges that usually punctuate such tense discussions, suggest that both sides were eager to capi-

Is It Revenge? Germany Curbs British Beef

By Barry James

Germany moved Tuesday to impose a partial ban on British beef, citing fears of infection by "mad cow disease" but touching off suspicions it was acting to avenge Britain's action in vetoing its candidate for the presidency of the European Commis-

"I think that would be unfortunate indeed," said the British agriculture minister, Gillian Shephard, when it was suggested that the Germans might be acting out of revenge.

Germany did not specifically link its move with the decision of Prime Minister John Major to veto the candidacy of Jean-Luc Dehaene, the prime minister of Belgium, to succeed Jacques Delors as commission president.

Mr. Dehaene was the favored candidate of both Germany and France, but Mr. Major said he represented an interventionist, big-government stance that was not acceptable to Britain.

The German health minister, Horst Seehofer, said his government would move immediately to block some beef imports. The measure has been sent to the Bundesrat, the upper chamber of the Parliament,

Officials said the action appeared to be mainly symbolic since it will apply only to beef from animals more than three years old at the time of slaughter or from herds where the disease, bovine spongiform en-cephalopathy, had been reported in the past four years. In addition, the German government is proposing only a six-month

UN Threatens to Strike

United Nations special envoy in the former Yugoslavia warned Tuesday that escalating Serb-Muslim fighting is seriously undermining the truce in Bosnia, and he told the combatants to stop attacking UN peacekeepers or face NATO air strikes.

steps in the peace process.

"I am alarmed that this upsurge in fighting threatens the prospects for reaching a comprehensive cessation of hostilities and undermines efforts already under way to broker an overall political settlement,"

He expressed concern over a statement by General Rasim Delic, commander of the Muslim-led Bosnian government army, that his troops would press ahead with an offensive to capture an important supply road in north-central Bosnia.

Mr. Akashi said fighting in the last week, concentrated mainly in the Ozren mountain region, had increased to virtually the same intensity as before the start of a monthlong tempo-

Wins First Round

KIEV - President Leonid M. Kravchuk won the first round of Ukraine's presidential ballot, the electoral commission announced Tuesday.

cent of the vote against 31.27 percent for his opponent, former Prime Minister Leonid S. Kuchma.

The two face a runoff round on July 10.

The results revealed a sharp regional split in Ukraine, the world's third largest nuclear power, with the nationalist western regions voting heavily for Mr. Kravchuk and the Russian populated east favoring Mr. Kuchma.

Mr. Kravchuk was vulnerable because of Ukraine's dismal economy. Since breaking from the Soviet Union in 1991, hyperinflation has ravaged the country. The monthly state wage is below the equivalent of $20, about a fifth of Russia's average wage.

President Kravchuk argues that market reforms must be gradual. But his critics say his reforms have been so gradual as to be nearly invisible. Elected in 1991, he was pressured to submit to early elections.

Instead of economics, his campaign emphasized the bloodless transition from communism, and warned that his rivals' overtures toward Russia threaten independence and could provoke civil war.

Mr. Kuchma, former director of a huge missile factory, has tapped deep economic and ethnic resentment among the Russians who live in Ukraine. He accuses Mr. Kravchuk of cutting ties with Russia too hastily, and says closer links with Russia and other former Soviet republics could stave off economic collapse.

Mr. Kravchuk has been praised by Western countries for moving to dismantle the nuclear arsenal that Ukraine inherited from the Soviet Union. He has pledged that Ukraine will sign the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. Mr. Kuchma has backed some denuclearization but opposes signing the treaty, saying the West has been slow to offer financial support. He vows to make Ukraine a more active member of the Russian-dominated Commonwealth of Independent States and give greater autonomy to Russian-speaking regions. (AFP, AP)

WASHINGTON — Marlin Fitzwater, the president's spokesman in the Reagan and Bush White Houses, has just finished a chapter in his memoirs about the chiefs of staff he worked under — starting and ending with James A. Baker 3d.
One of his conclusions is that Washington insiders have a better chance of succeeding as chief of staff than do outsiders.
"The White House," he said in an interview, "operates on a set of rules and principles applicable in no other setting."

President Bill Clinton has doubtless come to the same conclusion. Thomas F. (Mack) McLarty was admired in the White House for his congenial nature. But he was a corporate executive from Arkansas who knew neither the policy nor the players of Washington, and that proved to be his downfall. By contrast, few people in Washington and certainly no one in the Clinton administration has more of a grasp of the intricacies of government policy than Leon E. Panetta. The main job description of the budget director is to master the

Mr. Clinton would like to dispel the notion around the country that the White House is a chaotic operation in which decisions are made largely on impulse. And he would like someone in charge of the staff who can direct all the energy here in the capital toward passing his legislative agenda, particularly his health care bill.

Congress to Start Whitewater Hearings

WASHINGTON -- Henry B. Gonzalez, Democrat of Texas and House Banking Committee chairman, will begin Whitewater hearings July 26 and call as his first witness Robert B. Fiske Jr., the special counsel.

Mr. Gonzalez has been opposed to congressional inquiries into the Whitewater investment held jointly by President Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton, James B. McDougai, owner of a now-failed Arkansas savings and loan, and his former wife, Susan. But House leaders decided this month that the committee should go ahead. Hearings also are planned by the Senate Banking Committee, to be started by July 29.

The congressional hearings will focus on the so-called Washington phase of the Whitewater investigation, and leaders of both houses agreed to wait until Mr. Fiske completed his work in that area before beginning.

Mr. Fiske has promised to tell Congress this week whether Whitewater hearings this summer would interfere with his investigation. He has said he would release a report this week. on the death last summer of Vincent W. Foster Jr., the deputy White House counsel.

A Faltering State Department Welcomes Gergen's Skills

By Daniel Williams

WASHINGTON - David R. Gergen, the Clinton administration spin master, is by his own admission no foreign policy expert and is going to the State Department at a time when his role in the White House is in decline.

Still, Secretary of State Warren M. Christo-pher welcomed the transfer, top aides said, because he believes Mr. Gergen will bolster the packaging and presentation of policy both to President Bill Clinton and the public at large, and will help Mr. Christopher repair his own faltering image as shepherd of foreign affairs. in a statement, Mr. Christopher welcomed the appointment "enthusiastically," saying Mr. Gergen "will bring to our discussions at the White House a well-honed sense of how this administration can better communicate its foreign policy goals to the American people." Aides to Mr. Christopher said the secretary was impressed by Mr. Gergen's skills in organiz-ing presidential trips abroad and summit

meetings. Yet no one has questioned the administration's abilities at crafting spectacles; rather, tortuous paths in Somalia, Haiti, North Korea, Bosnia and elsewhere have thrown doubt on its foreign policy skills. When asked about Mr. Gergen's contributions to past debates on such security issues, State Department officials said they did not know what they were.

In any event, Mr. Christopher has been faced recently with a stream of reports suggesting that he himself will be out of a job by year's end. He has long insisted that his main problem is communication, and aides said Mr. Gergen offers a cure. On Saturday, when Vice President Al Gore sounded out Mr. Christopher about accepting Mr. Gergen, the secretary was said to have been enthused.

"It will be good to have someone from public affairs, communications and politics to be involved," said a State Department official, "We going-away present. Mr. Gergen, who was scheduled to leave the administration by this fall, will the crap out of us, so we need someone."

the monitoring can be extended after the negotiations. To monitor the freeze, two officials of the International Atomic Energy Agency are sta-tioned at the Yongbyon nuclear site. From there, they conduct inspections to make sure that the 8,000 fuel rods the North Koreans have removed from the Yongbyon reactor and dumped into a cooling pond are kept there and not diverted to produce plutonium, a component of nuclear weapons.

When the inspectors are not: present, the agency relies on cameras to keep an eye on the stockniles.

"Based on our understanding at this moment, the major elements of the program are fro-zen," according to the State De-partment spokesman, Mike the long-term disposition of the the rods

The best way to cap the North Korean program, administration officials said, would be to procure the rods and take them to the United States. Another approach would be to people who grew up in the West, but there's very little store them in North Korea in a about what life was actually like way that would make it hard for on the other side. One of the Chriton admir tration's fears is that after the talks end, the North Koreans may insist on taking the rock to their reprocessing plant to make more plutonium. The North is allowed to reprocess McCurry. But the key issue is the plutonium under the Nucles not freezing the North Korean ar Nonproliferation Treaty and program in the near term. Even as Washington pre-pared for the talks, military. planning was confirming. Offi-cials said Monday that the U.S. Navy was planning to send two minesweepers and an amphibions vessel from Hawaii to Japan this week as part of Wash-ington's effort to quietly reinforce its military presence.

Given the political and technical challenges, experts are sharply divided about whether the "miracle" that former President Jimmy Carter says is at hand in fact offers the prospects for a genuine breakthrough.

Selig Harrison, a senior associate at the Carnegie Endow-ment for Peace who recently met with President Kim Il Sung of North Korea, has argued strenuously that the North Koreans are prepared to give up their nuclear weapons program in return for economic and political benefits.

LOS ANGELES — A judge ordered O.J. Simpson on Tuesday to provide prosecutors with a sample of his hair for comparison with hair found on a knit cap discovered at the scene of his former wife's murder.

The disclosure is important because Mr. Simpson's attorneys have argued that he was at home at 11 P.M., waiting for a limousine to take him to the airport. If Nicole Simpson was alive at that time, it would support Mr. Simpson's alibi.

"We learned today from the coroner's report had no objection to the prosecution's request but he asked that defense experts be allowed to observe whatever tests were conducted.

Prosecutors disclosed Monday that a knit cap with black curly hairs "of African-American origin" had been found near the bodies of Mr.

We learned today from the coroner's report that Nicole's mother talked with her at 11 and he lives 10 minutes away." Mr. Bailey said. "So, now you begin to have a problem saving that he was at the scene or could have been." He added, "That is the defense: He was elsewhere."

But Mrs. Simpson's father disputed the coroner's findings.

the House of Representatives in commanding the president to lift the United Nations arms embargo on Bosnia. Such a result would have the United States acting virtually alone in violation of international edict and the pleas of allies. It would make Americans alone responsible for the likely response — the entry of Serbia's main forces into Bosnia. It would finish off what prospects remain for the settlement plan that the United States, Europe and Russia hope to agree on at the Group of Seven meeting in Naples next week.

Disruptive and token-like as lifting the embargo would be, however, it does respond to the anguish that many Americans feel. Bosnia's Muslim-led government may not be not wholly blameless. but its people have suffered grievously. mostly from Serbs. Outsiders who hesitate to put the means of self-defense into the hands of an abandoned people must find something better.

The American and allied alternative is a partition —51 percent for Muslims and Croats, 49 percent for Serbs, who now hold 70 percent. But even before its launching, this plan is collapsing. No military pressure is in hand or in sight to peel back Bosnia's Serbs. Bosnian Mus-lims mean to fight on, regardless. Even if 51-49 were achieved, it would be unjust, artificial and temporary. Meanwhile, it

The U.S. Senate is being asked to join would ratify Slobodan Milosevic's war aim of creating a Greater Serbia by conquest and "ethnic cleansing." It would leave him triumphant and in power. Another alternative is offered by David Gompert, a Bush administration National Security Council aide. Why negotiate a bad deal now? he asks in Foreign Affairs magazine. Quarantine Serbia, for years if necessary, as South Africa was quarantined until the Milosevic regime yields to a democratic government. Keep up the trade embargo. Break the regime's infor-mation monopoly. Protect Muslim en-claves, blue helmets and relief convoys, as the United States, the United Nations and NATO have repeatedly promised, with air power. Prop up vulnerable neighbors like Macedonia and Bulgaria.

The Yugoslav-policy landscape in Washington is barren these days. There is no energy. Lifting the arms embargo is an emotional pop, not a smart policy. Mr. Gompert's idea requires no new military pledges and moots the current danger of American participation in keeping a shaky 51-49 peace. It builds on an economic embargo and protect-the-enclaves commitment already in place. It promises less to the aggressors, more to the victims. It is more principled and could better last. The Clinton administration and Congress should think about it.

It's Up to the President

An Overdue Shake-Up

Monday's staff shake-up at the White House was overdue. Things have not been working. Apart from the managerial foul-ups that have plagued this administration from day one, the White House has not yet conveyed clear messages on foreign policy and even some domestic issues. With health care approaching the moment of truth on Capitol Hill, and with President Bill Clinton about to embark on a trip to Europe where his diplomatic credentials are suspect, there was a clear need for change.

But people who have studied this White House know that staff shuffles can go only so far. Having a well-managed staff requires a president who wants to live in an orderly managerial environment. By most accounts, Mr. Clinton still spends a lot of time on personnel, political and policy minutiae that should be handled two or three steps down the ladder. His preoccupation with details robs the administration of focus and continuity. Leon Panetta, the new chief of staff, commands respect in Congress and will run the staff with a stronger hand than Thomas "Mack" McLarty. His successor: at the Office of Management and Budget, Alice Rivlin, has solid credentials. Mr. McLarty shuffles sideways to a White House counselor's job, where his calm manner and lifelong bond with the presibetter fi

David Gergen shuffles out altogether, to the State Department, where he will serve as a special adviser. He was supposed to give the White House a communications strategy. He did apply a few Band-Aids before longtime Clinton aides turfed him out of the inner circle. The assigning of this public relations repairman to State suggests a troubling bit of self-deception.

Panetta Is Qualified

A White House chief of staff's lot, as Gilbert and Sullivan would no doubt sing today, is not a happy one, and that's putting it mildly. When you think of the recent holders of the job, you don't exactly think of felicitous circumstances. Some, like Richard Cheney under Gerald Ford and James Baker in the Reagan presidency, brought it off. More, though, got in trouble, generally for being too imperious — high-handed and bigheaded. The rap

on Thomas McLarty, the president's friend and confidant, whose replacement was announced on Monday, was the opposite: that he was too nice a guy and an unwilling enforcer, and he did not bring any Washington experience to the quintesany washington experience to the quanti-sential Washington job. Mr. McLarty evi-dently joined in the finding that he was the wrong man for the job. Like George Stephanopoulos before him, he has now been reassigned from an executive function to a counselor's role. As with Mr. Stephanopoulos, we should not be surprised if Mr. McLarty turns out to wield considerably more influence in that post.

Leon Panetta — smart, strong and steeped in Washington experience strikes us as a good choice to replace Mr. McLarty. He knows the inside of the Hill and the inside of the executive branch as well as anybody ever can. If his appointment is bad news for those White House staffers who have most spectacularly resisted discipline and shown little self-restraint, so much the better. Mr. Panetta's

The problems with the administration's foreign policy are not so much presentational as substantive, and that means getting the president and perhaps a new foreign policy team to define what Amer-ica's role in the world ought to be.

Indeed, getting Mr. Clinton to lock in on a handful of big issues and avoid bouts of misdirected energy is essential. To take a recent example, we can think of many better uses for his demonstrable powers of persuasion than popping his cork at radio and television evangelists and right-wing commentators, as he did last Friday.

It is easy to understand Mr. Clinton's anger: inaccuracies aside, the attacks on him and his wife from conservative firebrands have been malevolent. Jerry Falwell and Rush Limbaugh are merely the worst offenders in a growing universe of radio and television personalities whose contempt for fairness is matched only by their self-righteousness. But whining and public self-pity are not presidential-scale attributes. People want a chief executive who makes demagogues look like pests rather than opponents he elevates to his own level. Nor did Mr. Clinton help his cause by dragging the mainstream press into his line of fire and with his ahistorical (remember FDR?) complaint that no president in modern history has been subjected to "more violent attacks than I have."

This is an inefficient use of the White House pulpit, especially by a man whose greatest single asset is his ability to communicate. The country too seldom hears from him in a structured speech like his dramatic and effective health care address in 1993. Instead he has been flapping hither and you, talking in defensive sound bites rather than in broad, thematic speeches that will build public confidence in his leadership.

deputy, Alice Rivlin (who, we reveal in the spirit of full disclosure, once wrote editorials for The Washington Post) is a superb choice to succeed him as director of OMB.

David Gergen's new role as a kind of foreign policy mediator — is that what it is? -- is less clear to us. In much of that area, it seems to us, a great deal more change than what can be provided by a new mediator is required to straighten out the administration's approach to foreign affairs. Still, we at least harbor some hope that Mr. Gergen will be able to do a little good. At a minimum he should be able to help get the various players in the administration to sing from the same page in the hymnal. But this, of course, is not the administration's main problem most places where there is trouble. It is the song, not the harmonizing among administration agencies, that needs work.

In all these things it is the president and not any of his appointees who holds

Improved U.S. Policy for Russia and Central Europe

V/ASHINGTON — Bill Clinton's vis-Its to Latvia and Poland next week, as well as his participation in the Group of Seven summit meeting in Naples a few days later, signal a more comprehensive and strategically coherent U.S. policy toward the former Soviet bloc.

Generated by a working alliance be-tween the National Security Council and the Defense Department, the policy seeks to sustain realistic cooperation with Russia while also enlarging the scope of European security. Both the symbolism and the substance of the president's trip are likely to underline these important themes. The emerging strategy recognizes that the post-Communist transformation in Central Europe has moved beyond the economic phase. The central issue is now the region's relationship to the rest of Europe, especially with regard to security. This strategy recognizes that in the former Soviet Union, a stable and cooperative relationship between Russia and Ukraine is critical to the successful politi-cal and economic transformation of both. A product of serious debates within the administration and outside it, the new more realistic U.S. policy seeks to consolidate and formalize the new landscape that has arisen since the Soviet Union's collapse. Its critical objective remains the fashioning of a cooperative relationship between the West and Russia, but it recognizes that this goal is compatible with the progressive deepening of Europe's political unity and the expansion of its security perimeters.

Indeed, simultaneously promoting friendly links with Russia and enhancing Central Europe's security is likely to prove more productive than concentrating on one or the other.

The schedule for President Clinton's trip has a strategic logic. In Riga he is bound to underline American sympathies for the three small Baltic democracies - echoing the Scandinavian countries, which have become impressively committed to the survival of these former victims of Stalinist expansion.

In a remarkable and obviously deliberate formulation, the Swedish prime minister recently referred to them as Sweden's "near abroad," adding that his country would not be indifferent if their. independence was again threatened.

In affirming U.S. support for the Baltic republics, President Clinton would not be offending the Russians. Except for extremists, most Russians accept the separate status of these republics.

Russian troop withdrawals are likely to be completed on schedule. Even the large

Russian minorities in Estonia and Latvia are developing a stake in the continued independence of these countries, given their impressive economic performance.

In Warsaw Mr. Clinton will face a more complex issue. The Poles fear that U.S. policy toward Central Europe has become function of U.S. policy toward Russia. They resent this, and so do the Hungarians and Czechs. At the same time, Russia has made clear that it opposes expansion of NATO to Central Europe. The president's visit is unlikely to resolve the issue of Central European membership in NATO, even though some progress is likely.

When Russia joined the Partnership for Peace last week, the alliance made it absolutely clear that Russia did not gain a veto on NATO decisions regarding membership, while Germany in particular has indicated that it favors the expansion of NATO into the geopolitical no-man's-land between itself and Russia. The president will have the opportunicity. No one should have to fear the answer would be almost none.

ty to stress two critically important themes. The expansion of NATO is a natural process, closely connected with the widening of Europe's unity, and any such expansion will reinforce a stable relationship with Russia. After all, the reconciliation of Central Europe and Russia is more likely in a setting of security than in a geopolitical vacuum.

Mr. Clinton might add that an expanding NATO would be prepared for a special treaty relationship with Moscow,

The theme of reconciliation with neighbors will be especially resonant in Warsaw.

commensurate with Russia's status as a major power and now also a friendly one. The theme of reconciliation will be especially resonant in Warsaw. The Poles are about to observe the 50th anniversary of the 1944 Warsaw uprising, which was suppressed by the Germans after 63 days of fighting while the Russians sat passively on the other side of the Vistula River. In contrast with the Normandy events the Poles have wisely invited both the German and the Russian leaders, to symbolize their desire for genuine reconcilia-tion. The president will thus have an ideal setting to make it clear that reconciliation and wider security reinforce each other and that the United States is prepared to clarify the criteria and time frames of NATO membership.

Finally, in Naples, the Group of Seven industrial powers is likely to address the theme that political instability and economic crisis in Ukraine will benefit no one. President Boris Yeltsin will be there -all to the good, since Western concern for Ukraine's future should not be viewed as an anti-Russian preoccupation. A more stable and nonimperial Russia is more likely to emerge if there is a stable and secure Ukraine. That is why the Group of Seven, and America in particular, are preparing to affirm their interest in Ukraine's well-being and to offer aid as long as Kiev shows its willingness to undertake long-delayed economic reforms.

So far, it has not done so. After the presidential runoff election between President Leonid Kravchuk and Leonid Kuchma, the former prime minister, which has been mandated by the June 26 election, the Group of Seven should twist the arm of the next president to appoint a dynamic economic reformer as prime minister and give him full political support. In taking the lead on this issue, the Clinton administration would show an important evolution in its thinking.

The signs of greater sensitivity to Central European security concerns and the increased emphasis on Ukraine are part of a larger and welcome adjustment in American priorities. Ukraine is no longer ignored or slighted.

The White House is consciously stressing its support for Ukrainian independence. Secretary of State Warren Christopher has gone out of his way to emphasize U.S. support for Ukraine's territorial integrity on the sensitive issue of Crimea. Defense Secretary William Perry has been truly energetic in furthering U.S.-Ukraiman military cooperation.

As of this year, aid to the former Soviet Union is no longer ignoring the non-Russian states. In fact, about half of it is now directed to them. This major reallocation reflects a growing recognition that a stable group of nations in the former Soviet Union is infinitely preferable to a renewed imperial structure - indeed. that a return to empire would probably even doom the still uncertain prospects for Russian democracy.

At a time when the Clinton administration is under assent for its foreign policy. it is good to be able to welcome the makings of a more realistic and coherent strategy for post-Cold War Europe.

The writer served in the Carter administration as director of the National Security Council and assistant to the president, National Security Affairs. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

China Gets the Headlines but Indonesia Compares Favorably

AKARTA — Where would you rather live: in Beijing or Jakarta. Wuhan or Medan. Shanghai or Bandung? Probably 90 percent of foreign investors with no experience of any of these cities would choose a Chinese destination. Before they take their leap, they might do better to study the actions of overseas Chinese.

Logic might suggest that with the huge investment opportunities in China, with the motherland opening up in all directions, and with anti-Chinese sentiment apparently on the rise in some host countries, as evidenced by the recent riots in Medan, Indonesian Chinese would be making their way back home. Are they? They do visit. Some are working on contract in China. Businessmen are investing. And, as they have always done, they continue to hedge their bets with investments in the West, Australia. Singapore and Hong Kong.

But are they really going home?

Why do I think this is the true

The foreign investors may have got things wrong. At present, net capital inflow to Indonesia is a mere $3 billion a year, roughly one-third multilateral and two-thirds private. It is thus a mere tenth of what is going into China, even though the Chinese "socialist market" economy is only four times as large. Various reasons can be found:

the proximity of capital-surplus, trade-oriented Taiwan and Hong Kong to the mainland; the recent frenetic rate of growth of domestic investment; the allegedly stronger work ethic and acquisitiveness of Chinese culture: fewer restrictions on 100 percent foreign ownership of some enterprises.

However, taking a longer view gives a different picture. One of investors' principal concerns profits and capital Indonesia abolished foreign exchange controls more than a quarter of a century ago. Given the size of capital flight from China, Beijing might do well to follow that example, but it now looks likely that exchange control will still be around at the turn of the century.

What about growth? The dizzy-ing performance of China in the last three years has overshadowed the fact that on a 20-year view, Indonesia's performance has been at least as good. Even more to the point, its advance has been remarkably stable from year to year, with GDP growth seldom under 5 percent or above 7 percent. It may never have had a Maoist forced march, nor be driven by the money-making zeal of today's ex-Communists. But China's macroeconomic managers would do well to take some courses in Jakarta.

Discuss This Golan Adventure

N EW YORK — This is the time for Americans and Israelis to start talking in their own countries about whether American troops should be sta-tioned on the Golan Heights.

That was the opening of a column of mine last November. Now the Clinton administration says it expects to send U.S. troops to the heights as part of an international force if Syria and Israel come to a peace agreement. But still there has been no debate in Congress and none scheduled.

There are two issues. The second is whether it is wise to commit U.S. troops as peacekeepers to the heights, one of the world's more dicey pieces of strategic real estate. But first to be decided is whether Congress has not only the right but the obligation to study the risks and benefits beforehand.

Israel's Labor government wants peace with Syria quickly. Over a few years, Israel would turn back the mountain ridge and high plateau from which Syria fired down on Israeli villages for 20 years — until Israel captured the Golan in 1967.

The present Israeli government feels that prize of peace is worth the risk. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin believes that peace with hard-line Syria could open the way to peace with many more Muslim countries.

The Syrians stall — unwilling to give the full diplomatic recognition Israel demands, even for those coveted heights on the road to Damascus. But one day President Hafez Assad is likely to grab the deal, a bargain.

Israel tells him that its political clock is running out. It will hold elections in 1996 and campaigning will start in 1995. Many Israelis oppose giving back the heights. The Labor Party wants to put the heights controversy By A. M. Rosenthal behind it by campaign time. None of the three govern-ments involved wants a congressional debate about U.S. troops. Whatever Mr. Assad knows about public discussion he detests. And, like most American governments, the Clinton administration prefers to present diplomatic done deals before getting involved in congressional headaches.

For the Israeli government, a U.S. commitment about troops is critical to rounding up Israeli voters. So Israeli officials and the American Israel Public Affairs Committee argue hard against Senate legislation, expected to be introduced this week, to order a Defense Department study before a commitment is made

The report would include assessments of how large the U.S. force might grow, the risks that Iranian-paid Holy War military groups in Lebanon would target American soldiers, possibly with secret Syrian approval, and how long the American commitment might last.

Israeli Laborites see this movement for debate as coming from Israeli and American opponents of the current peace negotiations. To some extent that is true. But it also comes from U.S. friends of Israel simply concerned about the impact on U.S.-Israeli relations if American troops take serious casualties under a commitment made without advance congres sional backing.

I think Israel should be get ting much more than handshakes and promissory notes from Arab nations in exchange for land. But I also think that any risks Israelis take for peace are essentially up to them.

Returning With the Heroes to Freedom Summer

PHILADELPHIA, Mississippi — They do not look like heroes. Their bodies have settled into the fullness of middle age, and some, kids here once themselves, brought along their own kids. They looked extraordinarily ordinary, whites from the North, blacks from the South who 30 years ago vol-unteered for something called Free-dom Summer. Three of them died here.

but so, too, did Jim Crow. The returning volunteers had some things to say. The first was that the real heroes of Freedom Summer were not the 1,000 or so mostly white kids from the North who came down to Mississippi but the blacks who lived here. The second was that, by God, they had done what they set out to do. Within a year, the Voting Rights Act had been passed and the South forever changed.

The third - well, sometimes you had to listen hard for it. Representative John Lewis, Democrat of Georgia, said it when, from the steps of the Neshoba County courtbouse, he memorialized "two young Jewish men from New York and one young black man from Mississippi." He was referring to James Chaney, Michael Schwerner and An-drew Goodman, who were murdered here by the Ku Klux Klan.

By implication, Mr. Lewis was also

By Richard Cohen

referring to the foul direction that some elements of what is left of the civil rights movement have taken - a bitter separatism and, among some elements, the easy toleration of racism. and anti-Semitism.

Mr. Lewis had fought that battle once already, only it had been against white racism and white anti-Semitism. After all, it was the stereotypical Schwerner that the Klan had been after - the "Jew-boy with the beard," they called him. On June 21, 1964, they found him, along with Mr. Chaney and Mr. Goodman.

The bus of the returning volunteers was awash with emotion. Rita Schwerner Bender, Mr. Schwerner's widow, sat in the back. Andrew Goodman's mother, Carolyn, was several rows forward. Thirty years have provided them with some distance, but still Carolyn Goodman shuddered when she spied Mississippi's famous red clay — the typical shallow grave of Klan victims. "The red dirt," she said to no one in particular.

"What's the matter?" her seatmate asked. "The red dirt," she repeated. Down a row or two sat Joe Morse. The onetime seminarian had come south from Minnesota in 1963. "Don't let anyone fool you," he said. "None of us thought we would get out of here alive." The riders swapped stories of arrests and beatings, of churches burned and the little tricks of survival. Mr. Morse remembered studying every road, always noting a spot where he could turn a car around fast

There were never very many of them, but they defined a generation, a bunch of kids who fought Jim Crow and, later, U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War. They and their generation have become a virtually mythical point of reference: whites and blacks working together, a generation fueled on the high-octane "ask not" rhetoric of a recently killed president, the re-verberating voice of Martin Luther King and, for some, the manifesto of this or that leftist ideology. They left an imprint on the young Bill Clinton. They left an imprint on many of us.

Benjamin Chaney, younger brother the martyred James, says things haven't changed that much. He said it each time he was called upon to speak. From the courthouse steps here, he called out, "How many people here are from Philadelphia, Mississippi?" He repeated his question, but he got nothing but silence. In the muggy heat, cars drove by, slowed to see what was hap-pening, but kept on going.

The challenge now is different, may-be harder. The foe is immune to marches and demonstrations. At Mr. Chaney's grave, a local minister, Charles Johnson, spoke of black-onhack violence, drugs and illegitimacy. He might well have mentioned white apathy and resignation intellectual fatigue and selfishness. In 1964, the Klan burned Mr. Johnson's church. The Klan is gone, the church rebuilt. A movie would end there, but life is perversely creative. The fact is, some cople think things are now worse. And yet, our bus was led into town by a Mississippi Highway Patrol car driven by a black sergeant, Jerome Jackson. A banner at the Jackson airport welcomed the returning volunteers. This or that black elected official popped up to issue a word of welcome, and some of the returning African-Americans joked about having a fact that has a fine the base of the about having to sit in the back of the chartered bus. Once, that was no joke at all. Things have surely changed.

Generation X, whiny and self-involved, may not be able to understand what happened here. But neither. I think, can those who disparage the liberal impulse and who ossify themselves with layers of cynicism. "This was the best thing I did in my life," said Charney Rounders was an official of the ney Bromberg, now an official of the Anti-Defamation League in New York. Once, he simply thought he could make a difference. If you look around Mississippi, there's little doubt that he did.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Foreign Policy Waits

Regarding the editorial "Bevond the Face-Lift" (June 17):

upon the Clinton administra- possibilities. Physical absence tion's foreign policy cannot be remedied by a mere shuffling of personnel; they are far too deep for that. The problem is centered on the Oval Office, and it is not so much the president's inattention to foreign policy as a fundamental lack of understanding of the relation of foreign to domestic policy on the one hand, and the imperatives of foreign policy on the other.

Unique among nations, America is a guardian power, the power of last resort in the world today. Understanding the full implications of the opportunities which this provides for American interests, and the responsibilities which we bear to the nations of the world as a result of it, is central to any effective and coherent Ameri- subsequent local move?

Creating an integrated, practical foreign policy framework which measures up to these responsibilities is the most pressure. ing need of our country. Unless, and until, President Bill Clinton develops a clear understanding of the difference between being the governor of the United States and the president of a guardian power in a difficult world. American policy will continue to suffer.

The Majority Replies

Regarding "America to Clinton: We Hate You!" (May 23): Those who take the trouble to read this article will find that the evidence supporting the head-line's assertion is described as "anecdotal" by the writer herself and based largely on an informal survey of radio talk shows. As the article stated, public support for the Clinton presidency, as measured by national polls, has been "slightly over 50 percent."

The writer neglects to mention that Bill Clinton's approval rating over the past six months or so has been, on average, higher than that of any major Western head of state.

An Atlantic Union

In response to "Time for an American Till to Europe" (Thinking Ahead, June 14):

America needs more than a tilt to Europe. And Europe needs more than a tilt to America. Circumstances dictate immediate initiatives to expand the European Union to embrace the North Atlantic nations, the United States and Canada. Such an Atlantic Union would join powerful eco-nomic forces with shared moral and ethical values.

STUART SHAW.

Expats: No Easy Ride

Regarding "Expatriates: Off the Gravy Train" (June 8): As the article concedes, the necessity of doing time abroad in order to climb the corporate ladder has gone. Today's reality is that, thousands of miles away from the boardroom, the employee is often out of sight and out of mind for the in-The problems attendant creasingly fewer promotion makes it easier for others to claim responsibility (and bonuses) for business coups. It is also easy to use the distant employee as corporate scapegoat. By leaving the home employment market, an expatriate diminishes his chance to change employers and is quickly forgotten by headhunters and industry contacts, lessening further opportunities.

On another point, the truth is that the quality of housing is abysmal, and the expatriate has to choose between bringing his own furniture, which rarely fits, or living with somebody else's. Limited time is available to find a home, and if unfamiliarity or desperation results in a poor choice, guess who finances the

I am sure the locals regard paid education as a wonderful perk, and I do not deny it. But I also have to accept my daughter being educated at English schools with the crazy national curriculum and attitudes that are little changed since the 1950s. The high turnover of students and staff often makes international schools unacceptable.

Social life also is very difficult. A large proportion of vacation has to be spent visiting relatives. But multitudes of family occasions, small and large, have to be missed because short visits are not viable.

It is difficult for expatriates to make friends outside their community. Partners of expatriate employees, largely female, are left in an alien culture and expected to cope without help. Often unable to work because they cannot get the necessary per-mits, they are unable to plan their lives. These usually welleducated women are not able to find volunteer work.

In short, the quality of life for the families of most expatriates takes a nosedive, while the cost of living increases dramatically. It would be interesting to see how some of the above is quantified in the cost-of-living indices. Meanwhile, the locals look on expatriates with envy.

JUDITH GREENWOOD. London.

The psychological problems of living in a foreign environment do not cease after two or three years. Besides the dispari-ties in prices, problems associat-ed with not being able to contact friends daily or see family in times of sickness or other trouble would seem to justify allowing expatriates a lifestyle a little less troubled than at home.

Time Rolls Backward

Regarding the back-page sea-ture "Out of Hibernation, a Pulace of Zoology" (June 21):

How astonishing! Your writer has discovered a case of time reversal, namely that Georges-Louis Leclerc de Buffon (1707-1788) "was appointed director of the botanical garden in 1839 and occupied the post until the eve of the French Revolution."

Jeffrey Tate Debuts Rare Paris 'Ring'

By David Stevens International Herald Tribune

ARIS - In a heroic effort to reverse Wagner's mostly painful relationship with Paris, the Théâtre du Châtelet and Radio France have embarked on a staging of the complete "Ring des Nibelungen" tetral-ogy that by mid-November will have encompassed five complete cycles. It is under the musical direction of Jeffrey Tate, with the Orchestre National de France, of which he is the principal guest conductor, and with stage direction and designs by Pierre Strosser.

This would not be such a big deal in London or some Central European cities where the "Ring" is more or less an annual event. But the complete cycle has not been done by the Paris Opéra since 1957, although the Nice Opera brought its production to town in 1988, and there have been recent cycles in con-

With the opening "Das Rheingold" on Saturday and "Die Walkure" Sunday the musical fulfillment has been high indeed, with the Orchestre National (despite some slips in the wind sections on the first night) and Tate covering themselves with distinction. The orchestra's sound is warm and transparent and Tate's phrasing of a natural and unforced dramatic eloquence, resisting all tempta-tion to bombast. Nor is there any serious weak point in the casting, even though many singers are taking their roles for the first time.

TE, at 51, is tackling the full cycle for the first time, but as a répétiteur, he worked on many cycles at Covent Garden. and he assisted Pierre Boulez on the now-historic centennial Bayreuth "Ring" of 1976-80. There is a big difference between conducting something for the first time, and conducting for the first time something one has lived with for years.

Strosser's lean and austere staging will probably not get unanimous approval, but it is thought out and consistent. calling on the imagination of the audience and relying on the score to fill in the blanks.

Patrice Cauchetier's costumes put the action in the 19th century and the characters in Gentile the Donner and Froh.

their appropriate social conditions. Symbols are in short supply, but there is a luminous ball representing the treasure from the Rhine, small in the opening scene, large when it comes time to ransom Freia. The tree stands like a large objet d'art in Hunding's comfortable parlor.

The single playing area is a steeply raked lead-black stage serving equally for the nightieclad maidens at the bottom of the Rhine and for Wotan and family on their heights. Valhalla is no shining castle, but a stark wall that rises from the stage floor. No rainbow bridge, but a narrow door gives sinister access to Valhalla for the gods at the end of "Rheingold," and in "Walkure" the same opening admits only a hint of spring.

But Strosser has his singers move a lot, and most of the time to dramatic purpose. Erotic tension is high at the end of "Walkure" Act 1, although Siegmund and Sieglinde never come close to one another. At the beginning of Act 2, Wotan and Brunnhilde approvingly watch the flight of the sibling-lovers. At the end, Brunnhilde consoles demoralized Wotan, rather than the reverse, then she disappears totally in a magic fire represented by a huge red wind-blown drapery.

Robert Hale's Wotan was the solid pillar around which this first half of the "Ring" revolved, vocally strong and supple (despite an announced bronchitis), and with an energetic physical presence that wilts as life's setbacks pile up. Karen Huffstodt as Sieglinde, Jyrki Niskanen as Siegmund and Sabine Hass as Brunnhilde took their roles with an assur-ance that belied the information that they were role debuts. Sergej Koptchak was a Hunding black of voice and heart. and Nadine Denize the implacable but maternal Fricka.

In "Rheingold," Peter Straka's cynical and sumptuously sung Loge was a real dramatic counterweight to Wotan. Elisabeth Meyer-Topsoe was a radiant Freia, and Erda's ominous warnings were delivered by Kirsten Dolberg, no less convincing for her appearance as a kind of female vagrant. Franz Josef Kapelimann and Peter Keller were the Alberich and Mime duo, Csaba Airizer and Zelotes Eva Johansson as Elsa in "Lohengrin": Clean lyricism with touches of neurotic, dramatic thrust.

Hopeless Love in a Grim Setting

ENEVA - The scene on the stage before any music has sounded might be Berlin 1945, with listless groups of people in scruffy civilian clothes in a bombed-out urban landscape. But this is "Lohengrin' and the first scene is the king trying to recruit troops to face a new threat of war from the east. Fat chance.

It gradually becomes apparent that the devastation is more moral than physical, the effect of a divine appearance on a demoralized society, with a love story as hopeless as the relationship of Lois Lane and Superman/Clark Kent.

Robert Carsen, the young Canadian stage director who has rapidly made his mark in European theaters, tackles Wagner for the first time with an active staging for one of the most famously static of operas, giving the chorus a dramatically telling role to go with its musical importance, and playing the principals off each other in scenes of high tension.

In Paul Steinberg's grim setting of blast-reinforced concrete, Lohengrin's magical arrival and departure soothed traditionalists. They might have been conceived for a Disney epic, with a swan that moves and Lohengrin in glistening armor.

The second act's centerpiece, Ortrud vs.

Elsa, is played and sung for the great confrontation it is, while Lohengrin, adapting to earthly concerns, has become a dynamic politician vigorously working the crowds while ignoring his future bride's rapidly developing nervous breakdown.

Carsen uses the chorus flexibly, sometimes inventing ceremonies in which chorus members replace Elsa's workaday street clothes with a radiant white gown, or bring on a bed and make it up, a chastely erotic miming of the bridal chorus.

In the end, Lohengrin's moral-boosting efforts pay off. The tired, demobilized soldiers don their tacky armor for yet another campaign. Even Lohengrin's last minute defection as commander-in-chief does not seem to discourage them.

Marilyn Zschau, in her first Ortrud, sang powerfully and acted with nuanced precision, moving from arrogance and smug pride to fake humility without missing a beat — a veritable Lady Macbeth of Brabant — while Eva Johansson was a radiant blonde Elsa whose clean lyricism had touches of neurotic, dramatic thrust, Symbolically, Elsa throws her coat over Ortrud's shoulder (misguided protectiveness), then Ortrud returns the favor (planting the seed of doubt).

Also in a role debut. Thomas Moser was splendid Lohengrin, with an easy and glowing lyric tenor that seems made for the part, and a stage presence that suited the part, and a stage presence that suited the knight of the grail as well as the politico.

Hartmut Welker was the solid, honorable, deeply misguided Telramund; Hans Tschammer the king, noble and upright and a bit shabby in an operetta royalty uniform ready for the cleaners, and Eike Wilson Schultzlooked like a back mised and Wilm Schulte looked like a bank guard and sang like a first sergeant as the herald.

Christian Thielemann conducted vividly, buoyantly and lyrically, on the whole supplying the platform for a musically fulfilling production. Some striking effects were achieved in the final act by distributing some of the brass around the balconies.

LONDON THEATER

'Home': Hazards Of a Tone Poem For the Elderly

By Sheridan Morley

is, though the first production back in 1970 did introduce us to the stunning late-life partner-ship of Gielgud and Richard-son, by Sir Ralph's own admis-sion the brokers' men of great classical theater. There is now an additional hazard, however: as with Alan Bennett's "The Old Country," once you are in on the surprise of the setting. delivered late in the first act here as there, the play loses some of its power to surprise.

In the Gielgud role, Paul Eddington delivers a perfectly poetic, hearthreakingly elegiac per-formance. Tackling the eccentric ghost of Sir Ralph, Richard Briers has considerably more difficulty, not least because his is an infinitely cozier, less edgy or threatening rendering.

Jason Pitt brings moments of danger to the only other role, which in the original I seem to recall as a male nurse, rather than just another inmate. But the lesson of this revival is that the play does not have the great internal strength of the other Giel-gud/Richardson double-header, Pinter's "No Man's Land," which perhaps explains why

"But the strong yen might force some people to the conclusion that now there's really no question but to go forward, that to survive the company must re-establish a viable development and manufacturing process at home, even at the risk of taking drastic action on employment.

If so, deregulation, long the govern-constituents, takes on a new imperative. It will be the only way to create new business opportunities that will offset the erosion of Japan's manufacturing base, provide jobs for displaced workers and lower the cost of living to ease the pain of transition. On Tuesday, the government announced a long-awaited package of measures targeting the housing, communications, distribution and financial services industries. But the proposals were vague and noncommittal.

Although another bout of endaka-induced structural change may be good medicine for Japan, it may be equally bitter for other countries, especially the

A stronger yen gives Japan an extra incentive to manufacture more in Asia, which offers lower costs for land, labor and logistics. It also makes fresh foreign investments less expensive and goods made abroad cheaper in terms of the yen. For the United States, in contrast, foreign direct investment becomes more expensive and goods produced offshore are more expensive.

"It accelerates a tendency of the United States to undercommit to Asia and accelerates Japan's turn towards Asia," said James Abegglen, chairman of Gemi-

Caracas Imposes Currency and Price Controls

CARACAS - Moving to stem Venezuela's most serious financial crisis in a decade, President Ráfael Caldera has suspended some constitutional rights to impose price and currency exchange controls.

Venezuelan commercial banks on Tuesday shut foreign exchange markets on orders of the central bank until July 6, when a system of controls will be in place.

Mr. Caldera, who took office in February, pledged during his election campaign that he would not put restrictions on financial or economic activity.

The president, who spoke for about 10 minutes flanked by the military high command, did not say how or when his measures would be implemented.

Mr. Caldera's action allows the government to set maximum prices for basic products such as food and medicine.

To soften the effects of inflation, the government will issue transportation and food bonds to low-income residents, Mr. Caldera said. More measures will follow, he said.

Once the envy of its neighbors because of its rich petro-leum reserves. Venezuela has been plunged into an economic crisis that contrasts sharply with the resurgent state of other economies in Latin America and poses a threat to Venezuela's political and social stability.

The currency, the bolivar, has fallen 41 percent against the dollar since April, and inflation has risen to 18.7 percent so far this year.

Civil and political rights were among six constitutional guarantees suspended by the government Monday in its effort to prevent unrest over new economic measures, Information Minister Guillermo Alvarez Bajarez said.

"This is a precaution taken to prevent public disorder," which could occur in reaction to the economic measures, Mr. Baiarez said.

"The grave state of our financial system, the insistent wave of rumors, the speculative movements that have tried to bring down the bolivar, have forced us to take these measures," the president said. A large portion of the Venezuelan banking system has fallen into state hands. Inflation in May was 5.2 percent, one of Latin America's highest rates. It is expected to reach 70 percent on an annual basis by the end of Mr. Caldera said he believed the measures would not scare off foreign investors. "On the contrary, investors need a stable currency, need the security of knowing that foreign reserves will not dry up," he said. The government also will seek tighter regulation of commercial banks, Mr. Caldera

ARIS - Say fromage! If something seems lost in the translation, that could be an indication of the challenge McDonald's restaurants will face when they try to sell cheeseburgers here after France adopts a language law that is expected to receive final approval Thursday. The law would outlaw advertising that employs non-French words such as "cheese," "chewing gum," "cookie," and other words and expressions that can be accurately trans-

by Culture Minister Jacques Toubon.

"Hamburger is French, but cheeseburger isn't French and can't be used," said Yves Marek, an adviser to Mr. Toubon and author of the bill. "With this law, we're not trying to protect the French language, but rather protect consumers. They should be able to understand what they are buying."

No matter its intent, the law is likely to create more work and boost costs for foreign companies attempting to sell their goods and services in France. Marketers say it would dictate a "French exception" for global or pan-European ad campaigns tied to English words and expressions. The only other country where marketers face similar restrictions is Canada, where the French-speaking province of Quebec has also clamped down on commercial use of English. Even though "cheeseburger" survived intact, the company was prompted to replace its Happy Meal with "Joyeux Festin" and Chicken McNuggets with "McCroquettes."

McDonald's, with 309 restaurants in France that generate about 5 billion francs ($924 million) in sales annually, said it would do whatever was necessary to apply the new measures. Other American companies, however, were openly unhappy.

"This is bureaucracy gone mad," said Alan Vickers, president of Nike France, a subsidiary of the Oregon-based sports shoe maker. Mr. Vickers said Nike might have to abandon its long-running international advertising slogan, "Just Do It," in France, after plowing 70 million francs into an ad campaign last year

"This is a costly and unnecessary restric-tion that will prevent companies from mar-keting their products in the most appropriate way, and it will impact their plans for pan-

European campaigns," Mr. Vickers said.
Under the legislation, Nike would be able to use the slogan, but only if it gives equal prominence to a French translation. Specialists say such a translation requirement would cause advertisers to abandon their native ex-

"The requirements on translations will destroy the esthetics of the advertising," said Christian Blachas, publisher of Communica-tion/CB News, a French advertising industry newspaper.

Before the draft bill was presented this year, Nike moved to protect its media investment by registering its slogan as a trademark. But Mr. Toubon's legislation anticipated such moves, stipulating that even if foreign words are trademarked, they must be accompanied by a translation.

Meanwhile, in New York, Kraft General Foods Inc. announced a 35-cent price increase for each 13 ounces (368.5 grams) of Maxwell House cofice, a jump of 15 percent. An industry source said British consumers could expect to pay 15 percent more in September.

A leading official of the In-ternational Coffee Organization called for a meeting in October. "My conviction is that we should not have abandoned quotas," said Simeon Onchere, chair of the ICO council. "Neither a sharp rise nor a sharp fall in price is good. At the moment we are helpless observers."

In London on Tuesday, the price for coffee for delivery in September rose $155, to $3,003 a metric ton. In New York, arabica coffee for September delivery rose 11.35 cents a pound to $1.7295. (Reuters, Bloomberg) which are sensitive to swings in the economy and interest rates, were among the biggest losers. The Dow Jones industrial average closed down 15.86 points at 3,669.64, while losing issues outnumbered gaining ones by a 7-to-4 ratio on the New York Stock Exchange.

The price of the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond fell 19/32 point, to 85 4/32, sending the yield to 7.51 percent, up from 7.46 percent Monday.

The bond market was pressured by signs that rising rates had not slowed housing demand or hurt consumer confidence. The Conference Board said its U.S. consumer confidence index had risen in June from May, and the government said sales of new single-family homes spurted an unexpectedly strong 4.2 percent.

The reports suggested the economy was growing quickly enough to prompt the Federal rates for a fifth time this year. Meanwhile, the Commodity Research Bureau's index of 21 key commodity prices, an inflation barometer, rose after falling on Monday.

Stocks also suffered from renewed weakness in the dollar. which could offer another incentive for the Fed to raise rates.

James Kirk, president and chief investment officer of Society Asset Management in Cleveland, said he thought the central bank would raise rates next week, when its policy-making Federal Open Market Committee meets.

Auto stocks "have seen their best days," Mr. Kirk said, partly because the wave of extra income from mortgage refinancings has crested. Ford lost % to 58%, Chrysler fell ½ to 47¼, and General Motors tumbled 1% to 50%; all were actively traded.

GM was further pressured by its management shakeup, in which G. Richard Wagoner Jr. was named president of its North American operations.

Among financial-services stocks posting losses were Federal National Mortgage Associ-ation, which slipped % to 84. Merrill Lynch, which lost % to 36, and MBNA, which fell 11/2 to 23¼. (Bloomberg, AP)

U.S. New-Home Sales Rose in May

WASHINGTON (Bloomberg) - Sales of new single-family homes in the United States rose 4.2 percent in May even as mortgage rates were rising to a two-year high. Commerce Department figures showed Tuesday.

Economists had expected the government to report a slight decrease in home sales because of the higher rates.

Separately, the Conference Board reported that its index of consumer confidence had risen to 92 in June from 88.9 in May. signaling that higher rates had not dampened consumer sentiment. Economists had expected the index to be flat in June. The data show that "the underlying strength in the economy is still there and will remain," said Darwin Beck, an economist at CS First Boston. "Higher rates haven't hurt the economy just yet."

Lab Business Lifts Corning Larnings

CORNING, New York (AP) - Corning Inc. said Tuesday that second-quarter earnings rose 24 percent, helped by strong sales of laboratory testing services and expanding markets for anti-pollution technology and optical fiber and cable.

The company earned $111.4 million in the three months ended June 19, compared with $89.8 million a year earlier. Sales rose 22. percent, to $1.11 billion.

Corning said half of the sales gain was caused by last year's merger of Damon Corp. and Corning's Metpath subsidiary, which created the biggest lab testing business in the United States.

Siemens, the German electronics conglomerate, is the world's No. 2 maker of pacemakers, after Medtronic Inc. of Minneapolis.

The Siemens unit had sales of $350 million last year and employs 1,300 people. The acquisition would more than double St. Jude's annual sales, which were $252.6 million in 1993. There are 700 employees.

"It surprises me a bit. It's a big sector for Siemens," said Thomas Voges, equities analyst at B. Metzler seel. Sohn & Co. K.GaA. "It makes sense, though, and

Mr. Clarke has been under pressure, since the Conservatives suffered a serious defeat this month in voting for the European Parliament, to court voters by unwinding the tax rises he introduced in November. "All these figures add up to very good news," said David Shaw, a Conservative member of Parliament and vice chairman of the party's finance committee. "He's now in a position to look at tax reductions." But with British financial markets nervous about government borrowing, Mr. Clarke said he would cut taxes only when it was safe to do so.

Although the Treasury scaled back its forecast of the budget deficit for 1994 by £2 billion ($3 billion), to £36 billion, Mr. Clarke said this still represented an unacceptably large 5.25 percent of economic output.

"We have to demonstrate to the public that we do indeed cut taxes when we can afford to do so, when we have the public finances under control, when we have exercised the necessary constraint on public spending, when all the other circumstances make it sensible," Mr. Clarke said.

In another cautionary note, Mr. Clarke said he could not rule out higher interest rates if fastest-growing in Europe, looked like it might overheat. "If I was satisfied that the recovery was becoming too strong, so that we had a risk of inflation moving away from the government's target, then I would not hesitate to raise in-(AP, Bloomberg) stances," Mr. Clarke said.

Awaiting the Fed's Attack In the Trenches of Currency Warfare

By Richard W. Stevenson

New York Times Service

LONDON — Steve Dickinson and Mike

Clark hunched before a bank of computer screens on the currency-trading floor at Midland Bank's global markets division here, watching for any sign that the Federal Reserve or the European central banks were stepping in.

The dollar had slumped to another postwar low against the yen during overnight trading in Tokyo. Nervous European stock markets had opened lower.

A concerted attempt by central banks to prop up the dollar had failed Friday. The U.S. government's commitment to strengthening the currency remained very much at issue.
"If the Fed doesn't come in today, I don't know what will happen," Mr. Dickinson said just after 2 P.M. In the end, neither the Fed nor the European banks bought dollars Monday, and the American currency continued its decline against both the yen and the Deutsche mark. Traders, banks, investment firms, multinational corporations, speculators - all those who buy and sell currencies - were again left guessing about the dollar and American policy. An afternoon spent peering over the shoul-ders of Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Clark provided a glimpse into the complex combination of psychology, expectations and economic fun-damentals that drives the currency markets.

As dealers on Midland's interbank desk, they match requests by other banks to buy and sell currencies with prices offered by Midland's traders.

Despite large-scale purchases of dollars by Japan's central bank earlier in the day as the dollar slumped below 100 yen, the Midland dealers in London did not expect any action from the Europeans at least until the start of the business day in New York.

Because this is deemed to be an American problem, the CBs won't come in until the Fed shows its hand," Mr. Dickinson said. He referred to the European central banks.

The pace of trading was almost languid, with brief flurries of activity. A large-volume customer wanted to sell $250 million for marks. The dollar was trading around 1.58 DM at the time. The dealers were able to sell $50 million at 1.5790 DM.

There were few buyers of dollars. The weakness may not be justified by economic fundamentals, Mr. Clark said, but the fundamentals seem to have little relevance.

All that matters is identifying the prevail-ing buying and selling trends and riding them, and right now the trend is clearly downward for the dollar, he said.

"The sizable transactions are people selling dollars," Mr. Clark said. "If every time you buy a dollar you lose money, you stop buying them after awhile."

That process of matching buyer and seller and taking speculative positions for the bank's own account occupies the minds of Midland's traders and dealers. While they are by no means unaware of the effects of currency instability on the stock and bond markets and on national economies, market participants give little thought to that while engrossed in the split-second world of the data on their screens. "At the end of the day, the idea is to make money for our shareholders, for the room, for our management team, for the end-of-year bonus," Mr. Dickinson said.

Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Clark said that Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who over the last year had left traders with the impression that he favored a weak dollar in relation to the yen, might be happy to see the dollar stay weak as a way of putting pressure on Japan.

"This is not a market that's very impressed by central banks drawing a line in the sand," Mr. Clark said. "The U.S. administration brought this on themselves."

As the afternoon wore on, it became apparent that the Fed was not going to give the markets a chance to test its mettle, for this day at least. The key factor, as far as Mid-land's dealers could tell, was that stock prices on Wall Street had been stable in early trading, suggesting that the investment markets were recovering their equilibrium despite the dollar's slide,

The Fed may also have been helped when the London stock market, Europe's largest, recovered strongly after falling sharply in the morning. The Financial Times-Stock Exchange index of 100 shares closed up 23.3 points at 2,899.9.

"I think the Fed is probably taking comfort from the fact that the Dow is quite steady," Mr. Clark said. "The lack of central bank activity and the calm in the equity markets adds support to the view that what they're really interested in is stability in the markets rather than the absolute value of the dollar."

The dollar had been gyrating during the afternoon between 1.5810 DM and 1.5750 DM, a spread that provided enough margin for speculators to bet on the ticks up and down. But if there was to be large-scale speculation, Mr. Clark said it would probably come still later in the day.

"The speculators might want to wait until Europe has gone home, to foreclose the possibility of coordinated intervention by the central banks, and then go Fed-hunting," Mr. Clark said.

Opel Says It Will Have Profitable 2d Quarter

FRANKFURT - Adam Opel AG, the German subsidiary of General Motors Corp., had a large loss in 1993 but was profitable in the first quarter of 1994 and will repeat that feat in the second quarter, David Herman, chairman, said Tuesday. But the company will have difficulty posting a profit for the year, Gail Gunderson, the chief financial officer, said. Opel last year had a net loss of 503 million Deutsche marks ($318 million), after a net profit of 259 million DM in 1992, Mr. Herman said.

The company blamed last year's loss on a 15 percent drop in European car sales, including a 19 percent tumble in Germany alone. Opel's sales last year fell 21 percent, to 23 billion DM from 29.1 billion. Exchange-rate effects reduced income by 360 million DM last year, particularly against the peseta and the lira, which fell sharply after last summer's rearrangement of European exchange rates.

Mr. Gunderson said it would be "extremely difficult" for the first-half profit this year to offset an anticipated second-half will include large investments, summer closure costs and the traditionally slow sales periods of August and late December.

"Opel is now in a profitable situation," Mr. Gunderson time for Opel. I doubt that we for $51.1 million. whole of the year."
Mr. Gunderson declined to

Deregulation Plan Offered by Hata — For His Successor

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches TOKYO - A plan to transform Japan's markets by cutting import rules on 279 goods and services was offered Tuesday by the outgoing prime minister, Tsutomu Hata, but its approval will be up to his Economists said there was little chance the package would satisfy U.S. demands. American officials said they had not studied the report.

One of the key changes would accept foreign testing for home-building materials.

It also would bring Japan's standards and testing requirements in line with other major trading nations for food prod-ucts, pharmaceuticals and med-

It would expand the acceptance of foreign test data on automobiles, while simplifying procedures for imports by using computer processing.

The plan would ease restrictions on issuing commercial paper and include other measures to deregulate securities markets.

A government spokesman, Hiroshi Kumagai, would not say by how much the proposed rule changes were expected to reduce Japan's trade surplus. which last year was $59 billion with the United States alone.

that the package was unlikely to result in a quick rise in imports. They warned that the measures represented only one step in a process that would take years.

Satoshi Shimamoto, an economist with MMS International, said, "In order to smooth the way for deregulation, there has to be a stronger government, and stronger political parties. We have had many proposals, but they haven't been implemented seriously yet." He said deregulation efforts could also be stymied by bureaucrats trying to reassert themselves.

The chief economist at S.G. Warburg, Jesper Koll, said measures to improve competition among distributors and to increase the housing supply were likely to have the largest positive impact on economy.

Approval of the measures will have to wait until Parliament chooses a successor to Mr. Hata, who resigned Saturday after two months in office.

Deregulation was a major pledge of Mr. Hata and his predecessor, Morihiro Hosokawa, who took power last August, ending 38 years of rule by the Liberal Democrats.

In the past year, the government has said it will ease or scrap import regulations on 781

Japan's Lethal Corporate Hecklers

'Sokaiya' Threaten to Disrupt Shareholder Meetings

By Andrew Pollack New York Times Service

TOKYO - These are scary times for corporate executives in Japan, and not just because of the depressed economy and the strong yen.

Consider the case of Juntaro Suzuki, a senior managing director for Fuji Photo Film Co. The executive answered the doorbell of his western Tokyo home one evening in February to find a stranger who said he had accidentally driven into Mr. Suzuki's fence. A few minutes later, Mr. Suzuki lay dying in his doorway, stabbed several times with what the police say was a samurai sword.

The killer has not been found, but there is a widespread assumption here that it was the work of gangsters who extort money from companies by threatening to disclose corporate secrets at annual shareholder meetings.

Such gangsters, known as sokaiya, have been a fixture of corporate life here for decades. But Mr. Suzuki's murder and attacks on several other executives have raised fears that the gangsters are getting more violent. Anxiety is rising now because about 2,000 Japanese companies will hold their annual meetings Wednesday.

The reason so many companies hold their meetings on the same day is to spread the sokaiya thin, even though this also makes it hard for legitimate shareholders to attend more than one meeting.

"This year the sokaiya are feeling a sense of emergency," said Tsuguharu Fujita, a member of an anti-sokaiya task force set up by the Tokyo police. "Socially, they are becoming isolated."

The police say that as the sokaiya are ties to the yakuza, Japan's organized-crime groups.

Meanwhile, executives are bracing for the worst. About 10,000 policemen will be dispatched to guard annual meetings this year, up 30 percent from last year. Already, Tokyo police are providing extra security for 130 executives.

Mitsukoshi Ltd., the department-store chain, had its chairman sit behind a transparent acrylic wall at the company's annual meeting in March.

'You can't risk your life," said Natsuaki Fusano, a senior managing director of Keidanren, Japan's federation of economic organizations. Dealing with Police say the sokaiya are becoming more violent and are increasing their ties to Japan's organized-crime groups.

the sokaiya, he said, has become "a matter of violence, not a matter of sincere

The chances of anyone being hurt or killed are small. At the annual meetings, sokaiya rarely do anything more than fulminate and occasionally throw a bottle or two. Still, the police are making a big show of toughness this year. "It will be like a shareholders meeting under curiew," said Hideaki Kubori, a lawyer who helps police arrested several notorious sokaiya. One was hauled in on charges of registering a car under a false name. Another was charged with calling up the president of a stationery company and telling him to beg for his life.

Sokaiya thrive in Japan because shareholders have relatively little say in how a company is run and little information about corporate matters. Executives place a premium on holding an annual meeting that runs smoothly and takes no more than an hour.

The sokaiya, who buy shares in a company so they can attend the meeting, take advantage of this executive attitude. Unless the company pays them off, they threaten to disrupt the meeting by asking questions about company blunders, misuse of money or romantic dalliances of executives.

Since a law was enacted in 1982 banning payoffs to sokaiya, the number of people involved in such activities is estimated to have shrunk from more than 7,000 to about 1,200. But it is clear that many companies still deal with them. Last year, four executives of Kirin Brewery Co., Japan's largest beer maker, were arrested on suspicion of paying about $300,000 to sokaiya to ensure a smooth annual meeting. Last year's meeting, in fact, lasted a succinct 24 minutes.

The year before, three executives of Ito-Yokado Co., a large retailer, were charged with paying more than $200,000 to gangsters. Kirin's chairman and Ito-Yokado's president resigned, and the two highly publicized incidents have prompted more companies to sever dealings with the sokatya.

The National Police Agency has records of 18 attacks on executives or their

Very briefly:

 China, faced with growing unrest among workers fearing unemployment, is preparing measures to protect job security and working conditions, according to an official news report.

 Being's first attempt at competitive bidding for shares listed on stock exchanges in Shanghai and Shenzhen was only a mixed success, according to local reports; the bidding was designed to replace a lottery system.

• China's president, Jiang Zemin, called for reforms to improve the poor performance of many state-owned companies but ruled out selling off the companies, the official People's Daily reported.

• The Chinese prime minister, Li Peng, said measures to cool the country's overheating domestic economy were succeeding. "The growth rate has been slowed down, inflation is also leveling off, the economic situation is very good," Mr. Li said at a news conference before leaving on a European tour.

• DDI Corp., Japan's second-largest telephone company, said it would launch a venture in July, DDI Pocket Telephone Inc., aimed at providing digital portable telephone service.

• Singapore Airlines Ltd. announced a joint-venture agreement with Tata Group to operate a domestic airline in India; pending government approval, the airline would be operating by 1995.

Taiwan would open public projects to international bidders immediately after becoming a member of GATT, economic officials said; Taiwan applied to join the world trade body in 1990. • Japanese retail stores said sales in May were down from yearearlier levels for the 24th month in a row as consumer spending remained sluggish.

 Japan's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was unchanged in May from the previous month at 2.8 percent.

Navratilova Gains Semis, Along With McNeil, Fernandez and Martinez

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England -Martina Navratilova, pursuing a 10th title in her 22d and final Wimbledon appearance, stormed back after losing the first set Tuesday to beat Jana Novotna and reach the semifinals.

The fourth-seeded Navratilova ran off nine straight games after the first set en route to a 5-7, 6-0, 6-1 victory over No. 5 Novotna, the woman who beat her in straight sets in the semifinals last year.

Unseeded Lori McNeil and Gigi Fernandez also advanced, but the possibility of four Americans reaching the semifinals was thwarted when Lindsay Davenport lost in three sets to Spain's Conchita Martinez. The 18-year-old Davenport saved a match point at 2-5 in the second set and won a tiebreaker to force a third set, but the third-seeded Martinez regained command to complete a 6-2, 6-7 (7-4), 6-3 victory.

It's the 17th time in her career that Navratilova has reached the Wimbledon semifinals. After her victory, British bookmakers installed her as the 10-11 favorite for the title.

Navratilova compared her run here to the U.S. Open in 1991, when Jimmy Connors reached the semifinals at age 39 and she got to the final. "Here it is three years later

It's the first time in Wimbledon history that the top two women's seeds failed to reach the quarters. The 1981 U.S. Open was the last Grand Slam tournament where neither the No. 1 or No. 2 seed played in the final. The men's quarterfinals are set for Wednesday: Pete Sampras vs. Michael Chang, Todd Martin vs. Wayne Ferreira; Goran Ivanisevic vs. Guy Forget; and Becker vs. Christian Bergstrom of Sweden. The seventh-seeded Becker completed a 6-7 (7-5), 7-5, 7-6 (7-3), 6-7 (7-3), 7-5 victory over No. 9 Medvedev. The match had been suspended by darkness Monday night at 1-1 in the fifth set. Becker went down a break at 2-4, 0-30, but came back and broke for the match in the 12th game.

"He had his chance but he just didn't attack it right, Becker said. "He stood back.

Heisman Winner's Choice: NBA By Charlie Nobles

New York Times Service

ORLANDO, Florida - Regardless of which team selects him in the National Basketball Association draft, one thing appears certain about Charlie Ward: The Heisman Trophy winner is ready to make his living wearing shorts and sneakers.

"Football is my last choice right now." the point guard and self-described ex-quarterback said here last weekend, after working out for the Orlando Magic. "I'm a basketball player." Ward, a 6-foot, 175-pounder (1.82 meters, 80 kilograms), comes into the draft Wednesday as something of a mystery inasmuch as basketball has shared his sports calendar with football. He averaged 10.5 points and 4.9 assists last season, but played in only 16 games after helping Florida State to a national football championship.

 He has distinctive jumping ability. Of the 40 players at the Phoenix Desert Classic predraft camp in late April, he had the best vertical jump: 31.5 inches (80.4 centimeters).

• He is a court leader, so much so that Monday, he wrapped up the auditions in North Carolina's coach, Dean Smith. Atlanta (25th). rushed to tell him. "I really love the way you play," after Ward guided FSU to an upset at Carolina in his junior season. And the Indiana Pacers' general manager, Donnie Walsh, said. "He has a presence about him you just can't teach."

• He has character. Religious and soft-spoken, he freely gives of his time to charities and worthy causes. He resisted an offer to be included in that infamous $6,000-plus shopping spree by FSU football players last fall at a Tallahassee players. Afterward, Hardaway said, "I sporting goods store that may land the university on probation.

There are those who believe his exemplary work ethic will enable him to improve dramatically once he devotes his year-round efforts to basketball.

'The question everyone is asking is, 'How good can he be if he directs his attention to basketball?" said Orlando's coach. Brian Hill.

Ward believes the improvement will be striking. He likens himself to the Phoenix point guard Kevin Johnson. who was a substitute before becoming an All-Star.

"Hopefully, one day my game can look like his," Ward said softly. Actually, to hear him talk, it is simply a matter of time. "Once you practice, you can do whatever you want." Ward said.

"You can do anything." Ward has worked out in recent weeks for five NBA teams with draft picks in the bottom one-third of the first round. Besides Orlando, which has the 27th and 31st selections, they include Denver (drafting 19th), Chicago (21st). San Antonio (22d) and the Knicks (24th and 26th).

The Magic do its breath that he will still be around when its turn comes on Wednesday. He's a very talented point guard, and there are teams ahead of us with some obvious needs," said John Gabriel, the Magic's vice president of basketball operations.

In the practice with Orlando, Ward was assigned to work against Anfernee knew he was good, but I didn't know he was this good."

Ward has immersed himself in basketball after being passed over in the National Football League draft. Teams in that league were reportedly worried about his size and the specter of basketball as his first option. But anytime a Heisman Trophy winner is ignored, it sends shock

Ward doesn't have much to say on the subject, at least publicly. "It's just part of life," he said, offering no more.

The NFL snub grew more absurd early this month when the Yankees drafted him in the 18th round of the baseball draft. Ward hasn't played baseball since he was a high school center fielder in Thomasville, Georgia.

"Anything about me and baseball has to be mentioned with the idea that I haven't played in so long," he said. "In baseball, you can make a lot of money. but you have to start on ground level. Ward seemed amiable to the notion of playing for the Knicks.

"They have a great team," he said of Pat Riley's squad. "If they stay together, they can be right there again next season. Their coach is special.

And now they wait for W show-and-tell on Ward's future. Anyone who cares to put much import on the sentiments of Pat Kennedy, his Florida State basketball coach, will likely take Ward before first round's end.

There is no doubt in my mind that he can become a classic, backup point guard to start out his career in the NBA," Kennedy said. "And with a 12-month-ayear commitment to basketball, he could really play in that league."

Daly Disqualified for Score Error

CROMWELL, Connecticut (AP) — John Daly was disqualified from the Greater Hartford Open for signing an incorrect. scorecard after the final round of the tournament, the PGA said.

The card for Sunday's final round, which was kept by his playing partner, Clark Dennis, read that Daly had a 3 at No. 5. when he actually had a bogey 4, said Leslie Smadinos, communications assistant for the PGA. "Clark wrote down the wrong score, but it's still John's responsibility to check the card before he signs it," she said on Monday.

Daly signed for a 5-over-par 75 and a 278 total that was worth.
$11,520 for a tie for 22d. He left before tournament officials could figure out what happened. "They tracked him down late last night and discovered he knew his score had been a 4, but didn't realize it. was wrong on the card," Sinadinos said.

Olympic Stadium was nearly full, the Expos had their best pitcher on the mound and Monreal was ready to begin its challenge for first place in the National League East.

The Expos and more than 45,000 fans — the largest crowd since Opening Day - didn't go home disappointed.

Ken Hill outpitched Greg

pulled the Expos within 11/2 games of Atlanta, It's the closest Montreal has been to first place since May 29.

"The kids were prepared for battle," said manager Felipe Alou of his team. "What we showed tonight was nothing new. This team just doesn't get the credit it deserves."

But they did get a chance to end the three-game series in first place for the first time all season. To do so, they'll need victories Tuesday against Tom Glavine and Wednesday igainst John Smoltz.

Hill worked 71/2 innings and allowed four hits and six walks while striking out three. Maddux, loser of his last two starts and winless in three, gave up five runs on nine hits in 6%

"I feel I can pitch with any-body, and I showed it tonight," said Hill. "Maddux is a great pitcher and he kept his team in there. But so did 1.".

Montreal broke the game open in the seventh on Wil Cordero's bases-loaded sacrifice fly and Cliff Floyd's three-run homer. The Expos added two runs in the eighth on Tim Spehr's RBI double and Wil Cordero's bases-loaded walk.

"This series isn't going to make or break us," Hill said, but it gives us an opportunity to carry on some momentum."

Possibly enough momentum to knock Atlanta out of first place for the first time all season. Montreal has been in second place all but one day since April 26.

They hit better than us, they pitched better than us, and they played better than us," Fred McGriff said. "That's why they

"It kind of took the wind out us," said Houston's Luis Gonzalez, who had three hits and two RBIs. "But we came back. A win is a win, especially against these guys."

Cardinals 9, Mets 8: In New York, Gregg Jefferies tied the game with a ninth-inning double and an error by shortstop Jose Vizcaino allowed the winning run to score.
St. Louis's rally ruined a great comeback by New York, which scored seven runs — five unearned -with two out in the seventh to take an 8-7 lead. John Franco blew his fifth save opportunity of the season. Rich Rodriguez pitched 11/5 innings for the victory.

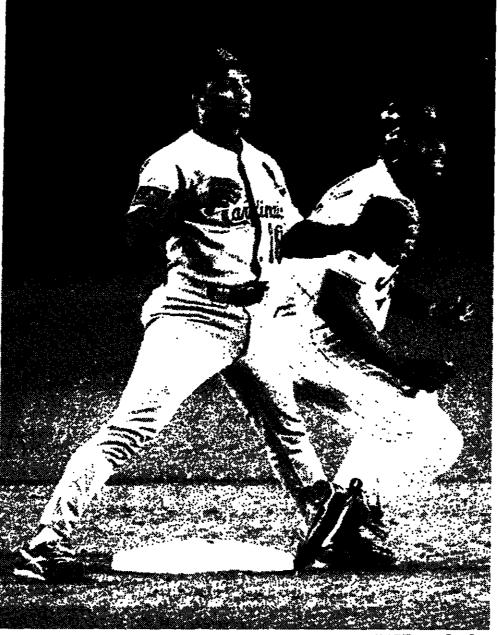

Phillies 5, Martins 1: Shawn Boskie scattered six hits in his first complete game in four years and Jim Eisenreich hit a two-run triple as Philadelphia won at home.

Boskie struck out four and allowed only one runner past first base for his second career complete game. The Phillies jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first and knocked out Florida's Kurt Miller an inning later.

Rockies 12, Padres 7: In Denver, Dante Bichette hit two long home runs, including a grand slam in the eighth, and Colorado had 17 hits. Bichette tied a club record with five RBIs, and Vinny Castilla and Eric Young also homered for Colorado. San Diego Test 15 Timners on base.

Tve never had a streak like this, where everything falls for me," said Key, whose only loss came April 9 in his second start. Whether I pitch good or bad, I find a way to win and the team finds a way to win for me." Key lowered his ERA to a tidy 3.01. In a season and a half with the Yankees, he is is 30-7 with a 3.00 ERA. His 11-game winning streak is the longest in a single season by a Yankees pitcher since Ron Guidry won 12 straight in 1985. Bob Wickman, who pitched a perfect ninth, won II straight games spanning the 1992 and 1993 seasons. Among Key's admirers Monday night was Aaron Sele, one of the brightest young pitchers in the league and Key's opponent on the mound.

"Key makes the hitter hit his pitch, and a young guy like me learns a lot watching him," said Sele, who has lost twice to Key

Mike Gallego drove in two runs with a sacrifice fly and a single, Luis Polonia had a runscoring bunt and Wade Boggs doubled home a run for New York, which won its sixth

New York's last run scored when Rich Rowland, the Red Sox catcher, threw the ball into

Scott Cooper hit his 13th homer in the seventh for Boston's only run. The Red Sox' only real threat came in the sixth, and Key stuffed that, too. Vaughn and Andre Dawson hit consecutive singles with one out and the next batter, lefty-hitting Mike Greenwell, hit a shot up the the start of an inning-ending double play. He walked off pumping his fists in triumph.

"I usually don't show a lot of emotion, but I thought that was the play of the game," he said. "Mike hits me well. I was just happy I made a good pitch and made a good play." Boston has lost 10 straight at

Brewers 5, Blue Jays 1: In the Blue Jays to their ninth consecutive loss with his third straight complete game. Eldred allowed six hits, giving opponents only 12 hits in his last three starts, to win for the fifth time this month. He fourth home run, a solo shot, in also extended the Blue Jays' losing streak, making it the longest for the two-time defending World Series champions' since they dropped 12 in a row in

Tigers 11, Mariners 1: In Seattle, Mickey Tettleton hit a runs and Tim Belcher stymied innings as Detroit ended its los-

Belcher who took a perfect game into the sixth, gave up just one unearned run. Dave Fleming allowed eight runs in 3%

Royals 2, Twins 1: In Minneapolis, Tom Gordon and three relievers made two unearned runs stand up as Kansas City bested Kevin Tapani and Minnesota. Gordon allowed five hits, including Scott Leuis's 10th homer, in 7% innings and struck out eight to win for the fifth time in six decisions.

A three-base miscue by center fielder Alex Cole and Tapani's two-base throwing error set up both runs in the sixth. Vince Coleman drove in the winner with his ninth triple.

Athletics 10, Angels 2: Rickey Henderson had three hits. including a homer, and reached base in all five plate appearances in Oakland, California. Henderson, Stan Javier, Ruben Sierra and Geronimo Berroa Milwaukee, Toronto was no drove in two runs apiece for the match for Cal Eldred, who sent A's, who won their fifth straight, Henderson broke a 2-for-15 slump with a single leading off the first and scored the A's first run, hit an RBI double in a four-run second; and hit his the third.

Orioles 7, Indians 6: In Cleveland, Jeff Tackett led off the eighth with his first home run in two years and Baltimore handed Cleveland its third home loss in a row.

Tackett, a career .215 hitter, grand slam and drove in five hit Charles Nagy's first pitch for his first homer since June 30, Seattle on two hits for eight 1992. Harold Bained also homered, his 12th, for Baltimore,

Germany Survives Tough Duel in the Sun

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches DALLAS - Germany had so much to prove that maybe. just maybe, it was too much for the defending World Cup champions.

After two mediocre games that had everyone from Bonn to Berlin in a tizzy, Germany's players, coaches and federation officials were hoping for a breakthrough in their final firstround match against South Ko-

And for 45 minutes the magic returned on a torrid Texas afternoon. Then, almost as quickly, it disappeared before almost 64,000 speciators at the Cotton Bowl.

Just like that.

Germany won, 3-2, in one of the World Cup tournament's most entertaining games so far. but it was South Korea that received most of the accolades after a grueling duel in the sun. Remarkably, Korea rallied from a 3-0 deficit and turned the powerful Germans into a team sitting on the precipice.

"We must admit, we are pret-ty lucky to have won this game," said Berti Vogts, Germany's coach.

That they were. After taking a commanding lead in the first 37 minutes, the Germans collapsed on a day when tempera-tures reached almost 120 degrees Fahrenheit (49 degrees centigrade) on the field. Fifty spectators were treated for heat exhaustion: 12 of them were hospitalized and released.

"At first I think my players were intimidated by the German team, and this helped them score their three goals." Kim Ho. South Korea's coach, said Germany already was getting after the game. "We knew if we just went out and played our game, we could come back."

But then their confidence grew as German players slowed to a jog in the second half. In a surprising move. Kim replaced the goalkeeper and captain, Choi In Young, with Lee Won Jae, to start the second half, but the risky move worked.

"My first concern was to win," Kim said. "If that means taking out the team captain, will take out the team captain.

We were too lackadaisical. We didn't bave any comph; comph being a traditional soccer term. We didn't have any strategy. I don't think lapping fullbacks. I mean, everybody in the world knows Romania is a counterattack team. Exactly who was marking Petrescu? And how Prunca?

I blame Bora. Getting Costa Rica to the second round in 1990 doesn't cut any ice now, pal. And what's with walking off the field a few minutes before the first half ends? Is it too much to ask that you coach the WHOLE game?

E XCUSE ME, Tony, you've now seen two World Cup games in your entire life, and you're firing a coach? Classic flank attack, my Aunt Gertrude. You wouldn't know a flank attack from a flank steak. And please don't talk about "funneling the pitch" against Florin Prunea, which you obviously made up.

I didn't mean anything bad. As you know, I'm a convert, I love the World Cup. I was just trying to emulate the foreign scribes. When Italy lost to Ireland, the Italian writers said their team was a disgrace and an embarrassment to the country. I figured that's the wayou're supposed to write about the World Cup. I don't want to fire Bora. Who in his right mind would criticize the coach who led the United States to its greatest soccer moment ever? simply want him to be less enigmatic. And enough with the aviator glasses and the Buffalo Springfield haircut already.

You know what they say in soccer: Life's a pitch, then you die.

Ah, Romania. The Carpathian Curtain descends. I watched every commercial-free minute of it. The logos in the upper left corner didn't bother me. (Though shortly before the half I had some questions about the telecast.

PONTIAC, Michigan - They came, they played and the grass survived.

But now there is 90,000 square feet (8,100 square meters) of Kentucky bluegrass that needs a good home. The turf was developed by Michigan State University researchers for World Cup games played indoors at the Pontiac Silverdome. World Cup officials said Monday that they would like to give the grass to Detroit or Pontiac. The grass has to be out of the Silverdome by Friday so workers can prepare for a convention on Sunday of 50,000 Jehovah's Witnesses.

"We're looking for an angel to move it." said Jim Duggan, executive director of the Michigan World Cup Host Committee.

"If we can't find someone, we've got about 12 individuals or businesses who want to buy it," he added.

Pontiac would like to have the grass, but does not have a place to plant it by Friday. Detroit has room on Belle Isle, but does not have anyone to move it.

If the sod goes up for individual sale - at a price of about 7 cents a square foot - Duggan said he would buy some.

"My lawn's not good, but I'd love to have some World Cup grass in my front yard," he

The last World Cup game at the Silver-dome was being played Tuesday, with Brazil facing Sweden in their final Group B match.

Bolivia's Dream Ends as Spain Marches On

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches last year at 12,000 feet in La Paz from Josep Guardiola after the has ended on considerably lower ground for the Bolivians.

The good news for all those who instinctively lean toward the underdog was that Xabier Azkargorta's suspension-depleted team finally got its first goal in a World Cup finals on Monday.

The bad news was that Spain got three goals — two of them from the midfielder Jose Luis Caminero — along with Group C's second and only other spot in the second round.

The Spaniards, who managed two ties and a victory in their three group matches, will meet Switzerland, the second-place finisher in Group A, on July 2 in Washington.

The Bolivians, who earned their only point with a scoreless tie against South Korea, will head home with the knowledge that it all might have lasted longer if their star midfielder, Marco Etcheverry, had not been red-carded after just three minutes in the opening match against Germany and forced to miss the rest of the tournament.

"Sure we are sad today be-cause we haven't qualified for the second round," Azkargorta said, "but at the same time, we are very proud because we qualified for the World Cup and we played the best we

Spain had Bolivia surroundwith talent, but somehow managed to make the game closer than it deserved to be. Then, in what can only be described as an act of foolishness. midfielder Caminero picked up a second yellow card in secondhalf extra time after fouling the Bolivian defender Juan Manuel Peña about 50 meters away from the action.

Despite its wealth of talent and a rich soccer tradition, Spain has yet to reach great heights in any World Cup. In eight previous appearances in the finals, it has never made it. past the quarterfinals.

And though Monday's 3-1 victory looked impressive on paper, the truth is that the Spaniards struggled for much of the match against a clearly inferior opponent and will have to improve quickly if they are to set a new national standard

"I believe we could have said Coach Javier Clemente.

Spain got its first goal in the CHICAGO — What began 19th minute on a penalty kidle

Bolivian midfielder Carlos Borja fouled the Spanish for ward Felipe after a cross into keeper Carlos Trucco protested to no avail and was then outguessed by Guardiola.

The game remained even and rather unexciting until the 60th minute, when Trucco rushed out to stop Jon Andon Goikoetxea on a breakaway and was spiked just below the left knee. Though clearly in pain, he kept playing, and six minutes later. Spain's hyperac tive defender Sergi Barjust, beat Miguel Rimba and pas to Caminero, who put the bal past Trucco to make the source.

But before the Spanisher had time to say "second round," the attacking midfielder Erwin Sanchez, Bolin ia's best player in Etcheverry's absence, fired a shot from feet (15 meters) that deflected off the Spanish defender Vote into the upper-right corner of the goal. It was Bolivia's find goal in six matches spanning three World Cup finals (1994); 1950 and 1994).

Caminero put an end to the flurry in the 71st minute, scoring his second goal off a fine through ball from the defender. Albert Ferrer.

Caminero, grateful as he was; wondered about the Bolivian strategy.

"Yes, I do believe Tricos was hit in such a hard way that; he lost some of his concentration and physical ability," he said. "I do believe a goalkeepe in that condition should be it. placed."

All that tainted Cammero's afternoon was the yellow card he received with less than a minute left that will keep him out of the Switzerland match.

Clemente didn't know whether to thank Caminero scold him.

"He told me I should not have done that," Caminero said of his heart-to-heart with Class mente after the match. "It was" dumb play. Obviously, I should have been more professional? but I did it and now I'm sos pended for the Switzerland Mexico's scoring — a high of three goals — lifted it to the top of Group E, in which all four teams finished tied on points and with even goal differential.

Norway, which tied Ireland 0-0 on Tuesday at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey, was eliminated with 1-1

Both Italy and Mexico knew that a defeat would probably spell elimination from the tournament and it was no surprise that the game was tense and littered with stoppages.

But only three players were cautioned by Argentine referecc Antonio La Molina.

Mexico's Joaquin del Olmo was the first man to be shown the yellow card for a foul on Roberto Baggio. It was his second caution of the tournament and he will miss Mexico's second round game.

His teammate Luis Garcia was also cautioned, for encroaching at a corner, while Demetrio Albertini was shown the yellow card for Italy for a foul on Alberto Garcia Aspe.

Italy needed a victory at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium to be sure of pursuing its campaign for a record fourth World Cup victory. But it never looked a champion against a Mexican squad that was largely its equal.

We still have optimal chances of advancing," said the Italian soccer federation president, Antonio Matarrese.

Mexico, which reached the

"We knew the Italians were going to press hard and in fact they came close to scoring more than the one goal," Bernal said.
"But we were able to muster the class and courage for the win"

With Mexico mainly seeking to control the ball early on, the Italians had trouble taking control of the game. Giuseppe Signori and Berti spoiled two scoring chances inside 20 min-

Signori failed to get full force on a bicycle kick alone in the goalmouth in the 27th and the Mexican goalkeeper, Jorge Campos, made the save.

The 1-1 draw between Italy and Mexico left all four teams in Group E deadlocked at four points from three matches and also even on goal differential.

Mexico finished atop the group thanks to the three goals netted during the first round, and Norway finished last as it had scored the fewest goals. Ireland finished exactly even with Italy, but ended up in second place in the group and went through to the second round because of its 1-0 victory over the Italians on June 18.

The meeting of the long-ball exponents Norway and Ireland was an untidy affair, with the attacking limitations of both sides much in evidence.

The game had just entered the third minute when the yellow card came out for the first time. José Torres, the Colombian referee, showed it to Irish midfielder Roy Keane for a challenge of Norway's Erik Mykland He later showed it to Ireland's Ray Houghton and Norway's Sorloth.

The veteran striker John Aldridge produced a moment of brilliance in the 11th minute to set up a chance for Ireland. The 35-year-old striker neatly chipped the ball over his marker and sent over a center that Stig Inge Bjornebye headed behind for a corner with Jason McAteer waiting to strike.

With both teams famed for long-ball tactics, it was expected to be a crunching clash of two teams with identical styles. But Ireland played the ball nearly to feet instead of heads and played better in the first

The trouble was, it didn't create much danger to the heart of the Norwegian defense.

Three minutes into the second half, Norway finally gave Bonner something to do. Paul McGrath made a rare mistake with a weak clearance to Mykland, whose low drive was saved by the diving keeper.

But Ireland started to create more danger at the other end.

McAteer sent John Sheridan raiding down the right and his shot on goal was intercepted by Biornebye.

Then Andy Townsend curled in a cross from the left and Aldridge climbed above Rune Bratseth only to head wide from six meters.

Ircland sent on David Kelly for his World Cup debut in the 67th minute to replace his fellow striker Aldridge, and Lars Bohinen went in for Norway in place of Oyvind Leonhardsen. Kjetil Rekdal, who scored

10th-Inning Stretch

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — You want to know about baseball, I'll tell you about baseball. Hank and me, father and son. It's baseball brings us together. Thirteen times a year we drive 160 miles for baseball. That's 80 miles to Baltimore, 80 miles back. Thirteen times 160 miles makes 2,080 miles we drive every summer. Just for baseball. Father and son. Driving to and from Baltimore. Together.

Thirteen times we park the car at $5 per park. Makes $65. Thirteen times we sit in our $14 seats way out in right field. That's $364 for seats, plus $65 to park, makes $429.

The parking is of the wayout-in-right-field type too. You can tell Hank feels — well. "ashamed" isn't quite the right word — maybe "disappointed" is closer to what Hank feels.

Feels disappointed in his dad. I don't know how you know this, because Hank is good at keeping his feelings under deep cover. Maybe Hank doesn't feel disappointed. Maybe the old man is imagining feelings his son might have, based on the feelings he — Hank's father — would have if he were a son accompanying his own father to these 13 games.

He'd feel - no, not "disappointed" in the old man, that wasn't the right word either.

Anyhow, driving 80 miles in the middle of the right is heavy He'd feel "embarrassed." The old fellow was shelling out $429, and for what? Seats way ting-up hour, but he insists on too. Way out in parking-lot he likes to drive and isn't really felling release. out in right field. Parking space

What I'd be thinking if I were Hank would be this: "The old man can't cut the mustard, else he wouldn't settle for way-outin-right-field treatment."

Baseball. It brings you to-gether. Father and son. "Isn't it great to be out at the old ball game, Dad?"

"I don't care if I never get back, Hank!" cries Dad, then wishes he hadn't. Never getting back from a Baltimore Orioles game has become an alarming possibility of late. Games had become longer and longer. After one five-and-a-halfhour game Hank and I, father and son, had come perilously close to complete honesty with each other about our feelings toward baseball. Only a father could take the lead, however. So, "Hereafter," I said. "let's make it a rule that we will leave the game, no matter what, and head home after they've played three hours." Hank's quick agreement -"Three hours is long enough" — was jolting. Could the lad possibly dislike baseball? Had I somehow failed to imbue him with an essential American love of the game, no matter how long it lasted?

It crossed my mind that maybe he thought I was in deep financial trouble and that this had stifled the cry for sustenance in his throat, for the ballpark price of peanuts and Cracker Jack for two could wipe out a $10 bill.

The 80-mile drive home after the game tests our character as football is said to test character. and this is hard to take.

Sometimes it was an ordeal, but at least you didn't have to listen to grown men talking drivel the way you did when football was going on.

going when you've been up since 5.30 A. M., Hank's getdoing the driving anyhow. Says falling asleep at the wheel, but I know what he's thinking.

'Can't risk my life letting the old man drive at this hour of the night. At his age, probably blind as a bat. Reflexes all shot too."

I know what he's thinking, It's what I'd be thinking if I were Hank. Worse than that, he knows I know what he's thinking, but both of us have too much character to speak these thoughts. Baseball doesn't build that character. It just brings you together. Father and son.

True Wit? Doubts on Algonquin Legends

By William Grimes

NEW YORK — Seventy-five years ago this month — no one knows the precise date — the feast of wit known as the Algonquin Round Table got under way.

Time has only heightened its allure. Throughout June, the Algonquin Hotel has been celebrating the patrons whose lunchtime gatherings made the hotel a byword for wit and sophistication. It has even renamed one of its rooms the Round Table Suite and filled it with Round Table memorabilia.

"Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle," a film about Dorothy Parker and Robert Benchley, set in the Round Table milieu, will reach movie screens in the fall. And in late August, Parker will be canonized with a spiffy Modern Library edition of her poems and stories.

For three-quarters of a century, legends of the fabulous lunchtime conversation spun by the likes of Benchley, Parker, George S. Kaufman. Marc Connelly and Heywood Broun have fizzed like tiny Champagne bubbles, intoxicating the public mind. The talk, as one of Alexander Woollcott's biographers put it. was "brisk and airy and sprinkled with bons mots."

There's just one problem. The historical record, and the less than enthralled commentary of many Round Table contemporaries, suggests a scandalous thought: The Round Table really wasn't all that funny. The members were. No one would argue that Parker's stories. Benchlev's sketches and movie shorts, Kaufman and Connelly's plays and movie scripts were not grade-A American humor. But the Round Table itself was a different matter.

"I spent a good deal of time researching this, and my sense is that it wasn't funny at all." said James R. Gaines, the managing editor of Time magazine and the author of "Wit's End," a history of the Round Table. "It was very competitive, which made it sort of unfunny. I certainly would not have wanted to have lunch with them."

Even in the group's heyday, the 1920s, critics complained that the Round Tablers showed a flair for self-promotion, back scratching and logrolling that dwarfed the combined literary talent of the group. The hilarity seemed a little forced, the jokes more than a bit calculated.

One occasional visitor to the Round Table said that it took him five lunches to steer the conversation to primitive man, thereby allowing him to launch a "smartie." Alas, it has not survived. Alan Rudolph, the director and screenwriter of "Mrs. Parker" and a fan of the group, does concede that some members used cheat sheets for their oneliners, and that Broun would bring his son to feed him straight lines.

How funny was it? There's room for serious doubt. After all, this was the group that originally called itself the Luigi Board, after their waiter, and whose evening poker club was called the Young Men's Upper West Side Thanatopsis Literary and Inside Straight Club.

In a sprightly moment, someone asked Franklin

Jennifer Jason Leigh (right) as Dorothy Parker in the film version.

P. Adams to use "meretricious" in a sentence. Adams, whose popular newspaper column "The Conning Tower' puffed the Round Table incessantly, was quick to reply, but "Meretricious and a Happy New Year" is not exactly Oscar Wilde caliber.

H. L. Mencken, who often staved at the Algonquin, called the group "literati of the third, fourth and fifth rate." He loathed them. "He thought that they were silly and not true wits and more interested in publicity than in serious artistic accomplishment," said Jonathan Yardley, the editor of Mencken's "My Life as Author and Editor."

Mencken's judgment seems mild compared to Kaufman's dismissal of the group, and he was a member. He called them "a motley and nondescript bunch of people who wanted to eat lunch, and that's

"And he was right."

Edmund Wilson also found Benchley, Parker and company less than scintillating. Unfortunately for them he recorded some choice specimens of Round Table humor, which, he noted sourly, seemed devoted to awful near-puns. Connelly's play "Honduras" was panned as "the big Hondurance contest." Parker delighted the group by bending the name Hiawatha into "Hiawatha nice girl until I met you."

Wilson, of course, disapproved of the group. But even admirers provide pretty damning evidence. "The Algonquin Wits." a kind of Round Table joke book remembering falling asleep."

published in 1968, makes very depressing reading. It's unlikely that anyone who labors through its 176 pages will run the risk of actually laughing out loud.

A cold examination of the record shows that the famous Round Table gems tend to fall into two categories: written rather than spoken lines, and quips whose provenance seems shaky at best. It has never been clear whether Benchley or Woollcott, if anyone, said, "I've got to get out of these wet clothes and into a dry martini." According to legend, Claire Booth Luce said to Parker, as the two prepared to enter a door, "age before beauty." As she swept by, Parker was supposed to have replied, "Pearls before swine." Luce denied that the encounter ever took place, and John Keats, a Parker biographer, agreed that the zinger, like other trademark Round Table jokes probably originated well outside the confines of the Algonquin Hotel and became attached to a member of the group because it seemed like the sort of thing that a Round Tabler might say.

There was one subject, however, that did inspire something like real humor, with malice aforethought, among the members of the circle, and that was the Round Table itself. "I interviewed Mare Connelly, and he got off a couple of good lines," said Gaines. "I asked if he remembered when the Round Table finally ended, and he said it would be like
